There's more to Photoshop than layers, however. There are also selection tools, image retouching tools, text tools, and a host of other functions that can help you make your images really shine. This book gives you all the knowledge you need to get started with Photoshop and master it. Understanding Photoshop's Layers In Photoshop, you're taught that you should keep your images as separate files for as long as you're working with them. Each layer has a different purpose and should be separated when you're not working on them. You need to organize them in layers, and you should carefully note the order you create them so that your finished work flows logically. The number one rule in Photoshop is this: Separate your layers. Each layer has a different function that you should carefully define before you start creating your image. Try to think of all the things you can do with your layers that are separate. For example, if you make an image to use in a web page, you'll often create layers that have elements of design, like backgrounds, such as shapes or patterns. These items are usually grouped in layers that you then use as a backdrop to your image. By separating your layers, you allow each group to have its own purpose. For example, a layer of shapes and a layer of colors can both be used on a page, but they serve different purposes. When you use a layer mask, the whole layer is under the mask, and everything covered by the mask is not visible. * * * Seeing where Layers come from Layers in Photoshop can be as old as the program itself. In the earliest versions of the program, everything was drawn by hand and dragged around the canvas to rearrange them. While most of us are familiar with the traditional layer icon now, they actually came from an era long before this. Layer files were often used to create the drawing. This approach worked well in a time when computer monitors were small and you might use a method of "painting" on top of each other — one layer of oil on top of a layer of paint on top of a layer of pencil on top of a layer of clay. By this point, the entire image would be filled with solid colors, over which you drew a layer of white — this was the "mask" for the next layer, making a graduated building from one to the other. To create the traditional Photoshop layer, you can still drag

Most of us probably use Photoshop on a daily basis. It's a complete image editing tool, working on all of the following features: Editing Photo editing includes changing colors, brightness and color balance, adding effects to the image, cropping and exposure, as well as fixing and removing dust and scratches from your photos. Moreover, using brush and the tools in the Filters panel (or Filter Gallery), you can easily apply special effects to your photos and create very professional-looking images. You're able to adjust any color in your photo or change the brightness and contrast. As with the professional version, you can also make repairs, such as fix cracks, remove blemishes, and smoothen images. Color correction also comes as part of the Software while the professional version has the Color Curves panel. You can correct all sorts of errors such as exposure problems. Image adjustment also comes as part of the Software while the professional version offers the Adjustment panel. This panel has most of the features of the professional version with more and more options. You are able to also make all sorts of adjustments to your photos, such as brightness, contrast, and sharpness. Resizing You can resize any of the photos you take or clip art designs you create, removing any unwanted parts of the photo or dragging it wherever you want it. You can take any of the photos you have and resize them to any of the dimensions you prefer. Layer Mapping Layer mapping allows you to create a new image by combining existing layers in any way that you want. You can apply the effects and filters from the previous step to any of your layers and see the results in real time. If you want, you can erase, distort, or move any layer at any time. A new layer is automatically created as you drag the tool over the layer below, but you can also create new layers by clicking on the New Layer icon. Once you have created a new layer, you are able to cut and paste any part of another layer. You can use the Eraser tool to erase any portion of the image. Tracing Using the Smart Tracing feature, you can place and draw over part of a photo, adding a frame or shadow on the image. You can also use the Pen tool to draw over the image. 05a79cecff

Labour's Trident appeal will be heard this week after members of the party voted by 43,356 to 10,290 against a motion by the party's National Executive Committee (NEC) to pull out of the party's convention next week. The NEC's motion makes the party's backing of the nuclear deterrent a vote of confidence on Jeremy Corbyn's leadership, on the same basis as the one it is seeking to invoke against him. It was presented with the support of several unions, trade unions such as Prospect and Unite, regional groups, and MPs including Andy Burnham, Chris Bryant, Joan Ryan, Ian Austin, Clive Lewis and Yvette Cooper. Trident being 'a vote of confidence in Jeremy Corbyn's leadership' The motion asks the Parliamentary Labour Party to consider a binding resolution that Labour's position on Trident should be a vote of confidence in Jeremy Corbyn's leadership of the party. It seeks NEC approval for the adoption of a party policy that says Labour should retain, renew and modernise Trident and, following a vote of no confidence in the government, that the next Labour government would not renew the nuclear deterrent's nuclear submarines. The policy was backed by the Socialist Campaign Group, the Fabian Society, the Green Party, Momentum and the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament. It was presented by MP Ellie Reeves, who is chairwoman of the party's ruling NEC, for "the entire NEC". The NEC voted by 43,356 to 10,290 to adopt the motion. By the time the final, penultimate, and in-principle vote was taken, the "numbers had changed radically", a Labour NEC member told the Mail. The final vote was 43,179 for and 10,296 against. Labour MP Ian Austin said the motion was the "opportunity the party does not want to miss" to give the party's members a "referendum on Jeremy Corbyn". "This is the opportunity the party does not want to miss," the former shadow health secretary told the Observer, adding that the NEC's decision was "absolutely appalling" and showed that "the whole party is out of touch with Labour party members". "I think it's astonishing that the NEC is
