Compared to the baseline spectra, the analysis of the anisotropic experimental absorption spectra revealed an anisotropy of the local field which is similar for all three kinds of emulsion. The comparison of the analysis of the anisotropic experimental absorption spectra to the Monte-Carlo simulations yielded the values $f_{out} = 0.919$ and $f_{in} = 0.919$ for the single particle and $f_{out} = 0.919$ and $f_{in} = 0.919$ for the cluster. Therefore, the cluster has a comparable anisotropy to that of a single particle. The angular dependence of the absorption spectra revealed that the polarization-selective excitation of the nanoparticles is independent of their orientation within the clusters. Furthermore, the experimental results suggest that the spin excitation within the emulsion is independent of the anisotropy of the nanoparticles and therefore independent of the orientation of the clusters. What's New in the AutoCAD?

Incorporate feedback from multiple users to make edits to your drawing and easily save the most up-to-date view. Update and synchronize the latest version of your drawings with the cloud. (video: 2:02 min.) Spice up your drawings with postcard-style drawing facades and markups. (video: 1:54 min.) Automatic drapes: Create your own custom windows. You can add and subtract drapes on existing windows, resize them, and easily create a system that fits your needs. Add a secondary drape to any window and easily control the transition effects. Constrain dragging so that drapes follow the path of the selected window (or anywhere in your drawing), rather than simply going wherever you drag. (video: 2:27 min.) Integrated collaboration: Hang out with your friends and coworkers on the AutoCAD Cloud. Easily upload, edit, and share files with your team. Easily sync work with drawings on the cloud and share files, drawings, and annotations on your team. Collaborate with others on projects with your drawings. Share and view all your annotations in one centralized place. Share drawings, annotations, files, and even cameras directly to the cloud. (video: 2:28 min.) Make more choices with the Unwrap tool. Wrap objects into other objects with the new Unwrap tool. By selecting the Inside option, you can un-wrap multiple objects into other objects at once. Select the Snap option and the initial center point to define a target for the unwrap. You can use the Target Point or the Selection property to specify a point. (video: 2:15 min.) Add a variable to the Parameters panel There are many variables in AutoCAD that are always in your drawing, but you don't need to manually enter them when you open a file. Now, you can add a variable that is automatically entered in the drawing for you. Check the box next to the variable when you add it to the Drawing Properties. The variable is automatically populated with the first value when you open a drawing or add a new drawing. (video: 1:28 min.) Examine the latest status of your drawings View a snapshot of your drawings and the status of your
