Typically, an optical fiber is made by preparing an inner core, a cladding layer around the core and a protective coating around the cladding layer. Further, to protect the optical fiber, it has been provided with an outer sheath around the coating. One of the most common forms of the coating is a polymer coating prepared by polymerization of a polymerizable resin composition in a liquid, such as an organic solvent. As another example of the coating, there is a coating of an ultraviolet (UV)-curable resin prepared by the methods of radical polymerization, cationic polymerization, or graft polymerization to introduce a functional group into the coating and curing the coating with UV light. The optical fiber is made by preparing a raw optical fiber preform having the coated layer and then drawing the coated optical fiber preform from the preform to prepare a fiber. To obtain an optical fiber having a predetermined desired property, an optical fiber preform is typically prepared by applying a coating over a core or a cladding in the preform and then drawing the coated optical fiber preform to prepare a drawn optical fiber. For the conventional coating applied to the optical fiber, usually, a resin composition is prepared by adding several components to form the coating and using this composition to apply the coating to the optical fiber. The coating is usually applied in a wet method, a dry method, or a semi-dry method to coating the coating. A

I have a SQL Server Agent job that runs on a background thread. It simply does a look up, gets a bunch of data, and then shows the info in a grid in a SSRS report. It's supposed to run once a day. It has been up and running for a couple of years without problems. It suddenly started throwing errors the other day. The job would run to the point where it got to the parsing and wouldn't find anything to parse so it just hangs in the middle of the operation and the job fails. I read all the questions and answers at SQL Server Agent: Background Job stops mid-cycle and I added extended events logging with the SQL Server Agent and found that at that point the SQL Server Agent was still doing a number of query operations that are set to run with AUTOCOMMIT=OFF. I'm not sure what to do. If the job really is blocked on a query that cannot find anything, I don't know how to change the query to find the results. If the job is stuck on a transaction, I can't drop the transaction because the rest of the jobs depend on that one. If it's stuck on a transaction, dropping the transaction isn't going to make any sense. I don't know how to change the query that the background job is running to just execute the query and then exit. Is that even possible? How? A: If I understand this correctly, I think there are two things to consider: 1) Does the job run often enough? Is it limited by how frequently the job fires? If this is the case, the job will continue
